LOST ON DRESS PARADE

MR. TOWERS CHANDLER was pressing his evening suit in his hall bedroom. One fron was heating on a small gas stove; the other was being pushed vigorously back and forth to make the desirable crease that would be seen later on extending in straight lines from Mr. Chandler's patent leather shoes to the edge of his low-cut vest. So much of the hero's toilet may be intrusted to our confidence. The remainder may be guessed by those whom genteel poverty has driven to ignoble expedient. Our next view of him shall be as he descends the steps of his lodging-house immaculately and correctly clothed; calm, assured, handsome-in appearance the typical New York young clubman setting out, slightly bored, to inaugurate the pleasures of the evening.

Chandler's honorarium was $18 per week. He was employed in the office of an architect. He was twenty-two years old; he considered architecture to be truly an art; and he honestly believedthough he would not have dared to admit it in New York-that the Flatiron Building was inferior in design to the great cathedral in Milan.

Out of each week's earnings Chandler set aside one dollar. At DIVORCE REPORT the end of each ten weeks with the extra capital thus accumulated, he purchased one gentleman's evening from the bargain counter of stingy old Father Time. He arrayed himself in the regalia of millionaires and presidents; he ook himself to the quarter where life is brightest and showlest, and there dined with taste and luxury. With ten dollars a man may, for a few hours, play the wealthy idler to perfection. The sum is ample for a well-considered meal,

Up Broadway Chandler moved with the vespertime dress parade. For this evening he was an exhibit as well as a gazer. For the next sixty-nine evenings he would be dining in cheviot and worsted at dubious table d'hotes, at whirlwind lunch counters, on sandwiches and beer in his hall bedroom. He was willing to do that, for he was a true son of the great city of razzle-dazzle, and to him one evening in the limelight made up for many dark ones. Chandler protracted his walk until the Forties began to intersect the great and glittering primrose way, for the evening was yet young, and when one is of the beau monde only one day in seventy, one loves to protract the pleasure. Eyes bright, sinister, curious, admiring, provocative alluring were bent upon him, for his garb and air proclaimed him a devotee to the hour of solace and pleasure.

At a certain corner he came to a standstill, proposing to himself the question of turning back toward the showy and fashionable restaurant in which he usually dined on the evenings of his spe cial luxury. Just then a girl scudded lightly around the corscudded lightly around ner, slipped on a patch of icy snow and fell plump upon the sidewalk. Chandler assisted her to her feet with instant and solicitous courtesy. The girl hobbled to the wall of the building, leaned against it, and thanked him de-"I think my ankle is strained."

"Does it pain you much?" inquired Chandler. "Only when I rest my weight upon it. I think I will be able to

The girl looked quickly up into Chandler's clear, pleasant countenance. Her eyes twinkled once very brightly, and then she smiled ingenously. "But we don't know each other it wouldn't be right, would it?" she said, doubtfully.

"There is nothing wrong about it," said the young man candidly. "I'll introduce myself—permit me —Mr. Towers Chandler. After our dinner, which I will try to make as pleasant as possible, I will bid good-evening, or attend you safely to your door, whichever

"But dear me!" said the girl with a glance at Chandler's faultless attire. "In this old dress and"

"Never mind that," said Chand-ler, cheerfully. "I'm sure you look more charming in them than any one we shall see in the most elaborate dinner toilette." "My ankle does hurt yet," ad-walk slowly. It is a little lonely dining all by one's self. I'm just a little bit glad that you slipped on the ice."

When the two were established promising waiter hovering in at-tendance, Chandler began to experience the real joy that his reg-ular outing always brought to him. His companion, even in her cheap hat and dress, held herself with an air that added distinction to the natural beauty of her face and figure. And it is certain that she looked at Chandler, with his animated but self-possessed manner and his kindling and frank blue eyes, with something not far from admiration in her own

Then it was that the Madness of Manhattan, the Frenzy of Fuss of Manhattan, the Bacillus of Brag, the Provincial Plague Pose seized upon Towers Chandler. He was on Broadway, surrounded by pomp and style, and there were eyes to look at him. On the stage of that comedy he had assumed to play the onenight part of a butterfly of fash: ion and an idler of means and taste. He was dressed for the part, and all his good angels had not the power to prevent him from acting it,

So he began to prate to Miss Marian of clubs, of teas, of golf and riding and kennels and cotilions and tours abroad and threw out hints of a yacht Tying at Larchmont. He could see that she was vastly impressed by this vague talk, so he endorsed his pose by random insinuations concerning great wealth, and men"I think my ankle is strained," she said.

that are handled reverently by the proletariat. It was Chandler's short little day, and he was wringing from it the best that wringing from it the best that could be had, as he saw it. And yet once or twice he saw the pure gold of this girl shine through the mist that his egotism had raised between him and ail ob-

"This way of living that you speak of," she said, "sounds so futile and purposeless. Haven't you any work to do in the world that might interest you more?" "My dear Miss Marian," he ex-claimed—"work! Think of dressing every day for dinner, of mak-ing half a dozen calls in an afteron-with a policeman at every corner ready to jump into your auto and take you to the station if you get up any greater speed than a donkey cart's gait. We do-nothings are the hardest workers in the land." The dinner was concluded, the waiter generously feed, and the two walked out to the corner where they had met. Miss Marian walked very well now; her limp was scarcely noticeable. "Thank you for a nice time," she said frankly. "I must run home now. I liked the dinner very much, Mr. Chandler." He shook hands with her smiling cordially, and said something about a game of bridge at his club. He watched her for a mowalking rather rapidly eastward, and then he found a cal laid away his evening clothes for a sixty-nine days' rest. He went about it thoughtfully.

"That was a stunning girl," he said to himself. "She's all right, too, I'd be sworn, even if she does have to work. Perhaps if I'd told her the truth instead of all that razzle-dazzle we might-but con-found it! I had to play up to my

Thus spoke the brave who was born and reared in the wigwams of the tribe of the Manhattans. The girl, after leaving her entertainer, sped swiftly cross-town until she arrived at a handsome and sedate mansion two squares to the east, facing on that avenue which is the highway of Mammon and the auxiliary gods. Here she entered hurriedly and ascended to a room where a handsome young lady in an elaborate house dress was looking anxiously out of the window.

"Oh, you madcap!" exclaimed the elder girl, when the other entered. "When will you quit frightening us this way? It is hours since you ran out in that rag of an old dress and Marie's hat, Mamma has been so alarmed. She sent Louis in the auto to try to find you. You are a bad, thoughtless Puss."

The elder girl touched a button and a maid came in a moment. "Marie tell mamma that Miss Marian has returned "Don't scold, sister. I only ran so long." The two girls sat in the win-dow seat, looking out at the lights and the stream of hurrying vehicles in the avenue. The younger one cuddled down with her head in her sister's lap.

"We will both have to marry some day," she said dreamily-"both of us. We have so much money that we will not be allowed to disappoint the public. Do you want me to tell you the kind of a man I could love, Sis?" "Go on, you scatterbrain," smiled the other.

"I could love a man with dark and respectful to poor girls, who is handsome and good and does not try to flirt. But I could love him only if he had an ambition, an object, some work to do in the world. I would not care how poor he was if I could help him build his way up. But, sister dear, the kind of man we always meetthe man who lives an idle life between society and his clubs-I could not love a man like that, even if his eyes were blue and he was so kind to poor girls whom he met on the street."
